Local Organizations Recognize Robinson & Cole's Pro Bono Service
Connecticut Law Tribune and Connecticut Bar Association Honor Lawyers

HARTFORD, CT (June 20, 2013) – Robinson & Cole cultivates a culture of pro bono service among its lawyers through the leadership of Edward J. Heath, pro bono partner and chair of the firm's Pro Bono Committee, evident by recent honors numerous lawyers have received.

Mr. Heath was honored with the Connecticut Law Tribune's Pro Bono Award at its Honors Night on June 13, 2013, for his work with veterans and women who are victims of domestic abuse, among other matters. Upon hearing of the honor, Mr. Heath told the Connecticut Law Tribune "I like to see this award as a reflection of what our firm has done. I've been a facilitator of people's pro bono work here at the firm, and the firm has done a lot of work in the community. I'm very proud of that work, even though I think it reflects upon Robinson & Cole rather than on what I've done individually."

The Connecticut Bar Association (CBA) honored Alaine C. Doolan, a lawyer in the intellectual property and technology practice group, with its Honorable Anthony V. DeMayo Pro Bono Award for "demonstrated dedication to the provision of pro bono legal services" at the CBA's annual meeting on June 17, 2013. Ms. Doolan received the honor for her work with the Truancy Intervention Project and Backpacks for Excellence in Education.

Additionally, 33 Robinson & Cole lawyers made the CBA's 2012 Pro Bono Honor Roll, more than any other firm or corporation. The Honor Roll recognizes those professionals who, in 2012, volunteered to work on one or more pro bono matters through any of the 19 Pro Bono Network agencies and programs. Listed in this month's Connecticut Lawyer magazine, the Robinson & Cole honorees are as follows:
